Twin Attraction

Decorating with Cards Can Be Yule Project

When children need a change from the toys on Christmas day, a promising project could be to let them see what they can do with the family greeting cards.

Here are some suggestions from Jeannette Lee, art director for Hallmark.

Tape or staple cards to lengths of ribbon and hang them on walls or doors.

Make a Christmas wreath by attaching cards to a circle of cardboard.

"Frame" cards with construction paper.

Decorate a screen with cards.

Teachers Attend Drug Conference

When teachers find out about a student with a drug problem, they are usually not equipped to handle it themselves.

Dr. Herbert A. Raskin, associate professor of psychiatry, Wayne State University, Detroit, Michigan, told Virginia Education Association members at a drug education conference in Williamsburg that "no single person, group or agency can cope with a case of drug abuse." He suggested that it takes the combined effort of many to find the answers.

Throughout the December 3-5 conference, 500 teachers and administrators from 102 of 130 Virginia localities heard suggestions from drug abuse experts, other teachers and young drug users on what educators can do concerning the drug problem.

Attending from Appomattox public schools were Miss Jean LaRue, John McLean, Tommy Johnson, Mrs. S. B. Waddell, Mrs. Pauline DePew, Daniel Davis.

William Burcat, state health and safety education consultant from New Jersey, told teachers that if a student came to them with a drug problem, "your duty may be to get his trust to the point where you can refer him to someone else in the community who is equipped to help him."

All speakers stressed the importance of teachers and parents learning about the drug scene. "If the students find ignorance or false information, they will turn you off so fast your head will swim," Dr. Raskin said.

He and other speakers pointed out that drug abuse is young people's plea for help and that besides help with their drug problems, they also need help with the personal problems which led them to drug abuse in the first place.

Dr. George M. Bright of Medical College of Virginia said that teachers, counselors and coaches do more preventive medicine than they are given credit for and he encouraged them to take advantage of the opportunities they have to do preventive counseling.

"Don't preach and don't panic," were two suggestions several speakers made concerning counseling and teaching about drugs.

Virginia Attorney General Andrew P. Miller told the VEA members there has been a tremendous increase in drug abuse across the Commonwealth.

"Each school division should adopt a policy on drug discovery," he recommended. This policy should spell out who in the school has the responsibility to do what if drug abuse is suspected."

Burcat suggested that when deciding school policies, educators consult with students, police, parents and clergy. "Most important, let the youngsters give some input," he said.

He also recommended that drug curriculums be built around the drug knowledge students already have. "Classroom methodology is extremely important in drug abuse education," he said. "We have to get away from the traditional teacher/textbook approach and make the classes pupil-centered."

This was the 25th in a series of twice - annual VEA instructional conferences, organized to update educators on current instructional problems or issues.

Letter To Santa Claus

Dear Santa Claus:

My name is Jane Elizabeth Almond, I am 7 years old. My brother's name is Timothy and he is 4. I would like for you to bring me a ker doll, and a easy bake oven and baby go by, by, and games.

My brother wants a race car track and a car carrier, and a gun set, and a train. Hope you and Mrs. Santa have a good Christmas.

Love,
Jane and Timothy
